

We Mean Business

American businesses from coast to coast provide the engine that drives the world's largest economy. One of the most valuable business tools is air transportation, which allows companies of all sizes to expand markets, serve customers efficiently and cost-effectively, and conduct business on a face-to-face basis. If our nation is to regain and sustain a strong economy, it's essential that we keep U.S. businesses flying.

At America West Airlines, we go the extra mile to accommodate business travelers. Our flight schedule is filled with nonstop flights at business-friendly times to major business centers across the nation—including our newest destination, the high-tech haven of Raleigh-Durham, North Carolina, which joins our route system May 31. We're also aware of just how important staying on schedule is for most road warriors, and our airline has achieved significant improvements over the past year and a half in critical areas such as on-time performance and flight cancellations. In fact, America West ended 2001 by leading all major airlines in on-time performance for the peak travel month of December, and we kicked off 2002 with another No. 1 ranking for January.

A wide range of services help make travel as convenient and comfortable as possible for the many business people who depend on America West. All of our jet aircraft are equipped with First Class cabins, which make it easier to get some work done during a flight. Services such as online booking, electronic ticketing and advance seat assignments take the hassle out of travel planning. Real-time flight and gate information can be accessed online at www.americawest.com or with wireless mobile devices. Our new Qik Check-In self-service kiosks, which allow customers to bypass the ticket counter and reduce check-in time, have proven so popular at our Phoenix hub that we're introducing them at several additional airports.

America West also offers a number of special programs tailored for the business traveler. We have an extensive roster of corporate clients who enjoy benefits such as discounted travel rates. Our popular frequent-flyer program, FlightFund, makes it possible for members to earn and redeem mileage for free award travel to worldwide destinations. America West Club airport lounges provide its members with a comfortable place to conduct business or relax between flights, with access to a wide range of business equipment and membership privileges at nearly 50 airport lounges worldwide.
